Regional clusters

We are establishing regional clusters to connect all parties with an interest in bioenergy within each area. Bioenergy is inherently decentralized, with end users and biofuel suppliers typically operating in proximity. Biomass and organic feedstocks are usually sourced locally and supplied to users within the same region, reinforcing the importance of regional coordination.

These clusters also provide valuable opportunities for networking, collaboration and knowledge sharing.

The Bioenergy Association maintains regional contact lists of interested parties. Members may have commercial interests in one or multiple regions and should ensure they are included on the relevant lists. Contact Anne to confirm or update the regions in which you are currently registered as having an interest.
